1840-1889: Background

The spread of industrialization in the mid-19th century brought radical changes in consumer habits. Factory workers dependent on wages lacked the means to be self-sufficient. In many European countries, this situation led to the establishment of "consumer cooperatives" or "cooperative societies", which sold food to their members at reduced prices. Switzerland's cooperative movement is distinctive in that the cooperative societies were not only set up by workers as self-help organizations but also founded by members of the middle or upper classes (philanthropists).

1840 ff. Significant grain price inflation and famine lead to the establishment of "fruit associations", the forerunners to consumer cooperatives. The aim is to purchase grains cheaply and thus make bread at low prices. Poor people, needy workers and widows showing proof of eligibility receive discounted bread.

1844 On 21 December 1844, 28 founding members – mostly flannel weavers – open a store in Rochdale, Manchester. They set out the basic principles that become the guideline for the consumer cooperative movement worldwide.

1846 A fruit association is set up in Basel and then dissolved in 1847 when the supply situation improves.

1847 The "General Society of Workers", according to Hans Müller Switzerland's oldest known consumer cooperative, is established in Basel. This is dissolved in 1859.

1850 There are already various consumer cooperatives in the larger towns and cities and in the Canton of Zurich. The "Cooperative Society of Utzenstorf-Bätterkinden" has 100 members and sells bread, flour, maize, lard, butter, oil and some spices.

1851 The first factory-based consumer cooperative is set up at the Rieter plant in Niedertöss. The "Société de consommation Fontainemelon" is set up as a "Boulangerie par actions" (joint stock bakery) for bakery products.

1852 Rural consumer cooperatives – the "Zürcher Landkonsumvereine" – are set up in Rüschlikon, Affoltern, Altstetten, Brüttisellen, Rorbas, Schwamendingen, Wollishofen, Horgen and Thalwil.

1853 Thirty-four consumer cooperatives hold their first conference in Zurich. An attempt to establish a loose union is unsuccessful.

1864 Textile manufacturer Jean Jenny-Riffel sets up the Schwanden (Canton of Glarus) consumer cooperative. It is the first in Switzerland to operate according to the principles of the Rochdale Society of Equitable Pioneers. Jean Jenny-Riffel had been personally convinced of their benefits while in Rochdale. The articles of association even took over the original English designations.
1865  The Allgemeiner Consumverein (ACV), or general consumer association, is established in Basel by socially-minded entrepreneurs.

Elsewhere, particularly in Berne and Zurich, worker organizations set up special worker consumer cooperatives to provide their members with access to inexpensive food.

1869  Olten conference of the Zurich, Basel, Berne, Grenchen, Biel / Bienne and Olten consumer cooperatives. This second attempt to set up a union of Swiss consumer cooperatives also fails.

1883  The cooperative is established as a legal form under the first Swiss Code of Obligations, encouraging new cooperatives to set up and making it easier to do so from now on.
1890-1914: Concentration of resources and growing success

1890  11 / 12 January: 42 delegates resolve to establish the VSK (federation of Swiss consumer cooperatives) in Olten on the initiative of the "Société coopérative suisse de consommation" in Geneva and the ACV in Basel. The ACV in Basel is appointed as lead section. Twenty-seven consumer cooperatives are represented, with five immediately becoming members. An upcoming referendum on a new customs tariff encourages the cooperatives to set up the umbrella organization.

1892  A central unit for product sourcing is set up at Steinentorstrasse 24 in Basel and a first, initially part-time administrator hired. An earlier investigation showed considerable and unjustified differences between the various cooperatives' cost prices for goods of the same quality.

1893  The federation of Swiss consumer cooperatives (VSK) is converted into a cooperative.

1896  Participation in the Swiss National Exhibition in Geneva. Hans Müller is appointed as the first federation secretary.

1897  The federation of Swiss consumer cooperatives publishes the first issue of the "Correspondenzblatt", a publication for the cooperatives that appears every 14 days.

1899  Creation of district associations.

1900  At the end of the year, the "Correspondenzblatt" is replaced by the "Schweiz. Konsum-Verein", which appears weekly in two languages. In 1901, the Glarus Delegate Assembly decides that each federation member must subscribe for at least as many copies as its most senior authority has members. The aim of this internal publication is to establish close ties between the central purchasing unit and the associations.

1902  Acquisition of a warehouse in Wülflingen.

1905  Establishment of a chemical laboratory for food analysis.

1907  Opening of the newly built Pratteln warehouse, which is equipped with a coffee-roasting plant and a maize and spice mill.

Establishment of the association of Swiss consumer-cooperative administrators.
1909  Creation of a dedicated pension fund (Versicherungsanstalt Schweizerischer Konsumvereine (VASK)), now CPV / CAP Pensionskasse Coop.

1910  A dedicated printing works is set up in the VSK's head office building.

1912  Decision to build a shoe factory, which will become a VSK department.

      Establishment of a VSK banking department.

      Purchase of Stadtmühle Zürich (Switzerland's largest mill) by the newly founded MSK (Mills cooperative of Swiss consumer cooperative societies).

1914  First collective employment contract between the VSK and the federation of trade and transport workers.

      The Chocolate War: attempted boycott by the chocolate cartel.

      Agreement with Bell AG on streamlined meat procurement, termed the "Bellallianz". The former federation secretary Hans Müller expresses strong criticism of the VSK ("alliance or misalliance?"). The VSK responds by issuing a publication on Hans Müller entitled "Ein moderner Herostrat" (A latter-day Herostratus).

      Introduction of the "Ringfrei" and "CO-OP" brands. The term Co-op is entered in the trademark register. Co-op is an abbreviation of the French word "Coopération" and stands for cooperative, cooperation. Initially, the Coop brand name is purely a product brand name. Only later does it become the umbrella brand for sales outlets, products and services.
1915-1939: Full-scale expansion of the federation

1915–1921 Completion of numerous mergers.

1916 Establishment of MESK (Milk procurement cooperative of the Swiss consumer cooperatives).

1917 Establishment of the mutual insurer "Schweizerische Volksfürsorge" in close cooperation with trade union representatives.

1916–1918 The VSK buys eight farms.

1917 Establishment of a department for trustee activities (control functions, restructurings, mergers, liquidations).

1918 Establishment of the SGG (Swiss cooperative society for vegetable production).

1919 Founding of the furniture cooperative "Genossenschaft für Möbelvermittlung".

1921 "Guidelines on the further development of the cooperative movement", a pamphlet written by Jaeggi and Munding expressing opposition to further mergers.

1919–1921 Official opening of the cooperative-based housing estate "Siedlungsgenossenschaft Freidorf" during the International Cooperative Alliance Conference in Basel. The event is attended by Swiss President Schulthess; the architect is Hannes Meyer.

1921 Establishment of the "Consumer-cooperative women's alliance", which from 1969 onwards is called Coop-Frauenbund.

1922 Bernhard Jaeggi sets up the "Genossenschaftliches Seminar" (Cooperative seminar) foundation. This is later renamed the "Coop-Bildungszentrum" and then the "Coop-Tagungszentrum" (Coop Training Centre). Training activities begin in 1926 with a two-week course on the cooperative society at the "Cooperative House" in Freidorf.

1923 Establishment of the "Bank für Genossenschaften und Gewerkschaften" (Bank for cooperatives and trade unions) in collaboration with the federation of trade unions. In 1928, this is renamed "Genossenschaftliche Zentralbank" (Central cooperative bank). It takes over responsibility for the business previously handled by the VSK's banking department. Opening of member holiday homes in Weggis (Canton of Lucerne) and Jongny (Canton of Vaud).

1927 The government ban on the establishment of branches by big retailers also restricts the expansion of consumer cooperatives.

1933 Bernhard Jaeggi steps down as President and Member of the Administrative Board (Chairman of the Board). Jaeggi had played a key role in shaping the VSK's destiny since 1908. He retains ties with the VSK as a member of the Supervisory Board.
Jaeggi publishes his hypotheses on cooperative-based merchandise sourcing:

1. Small and medium-sized societies should be supplied by large neighbouring cooperatives on the basis of supply agreements aimed at saving on superfluous warehouses and transport costs.

2. Cooperatives should be merged, providing the preconditions are met.

3. The product range should be limited, with preference being given to the CO-OP brand.

4. The product ranges, prices and patronage refund rates should be as uniform as possible in cooperatives operating within a single economic or geographic area.

5. Cooperatives should have an active pricing policy, even if this means reducing patronage refunds.

The revised Swiss law on cooperative societies comes into force. This also requires changes to the VSK and standard articles of association. As a result, the VSK is transformed from a cooperative society into a federation of cooperatives.

Establishment of St. Johann Lagerhaus- und Schiffahrtsgesellschaft (SILAG), mainly by the VSK and MSK (Mills cooperative of Swiss consumer cooperative societies). In the same year, SILAG puts a grain silo, a coal bunker and a warehouse into operation.

Outbreak of the Second World War and wartime economy.

Opening of the Mümliswil children's home foundation by Bernhard and Pauline Jaeggi. The children's home receives hundreds of children a year. In many cases, the consumer cooperatives bear the costs. They wish to do something to help families of loyal cooperative members on modest incomes.
1940-1964: Searching for new approaches

1941  Introduction of a standard chart of accounts for consumer cooperatives to enable inter-cooperative comparisons.

1941–1943  Numerous activities in the context of the "Wahlen" Plan to achieve self-sufficiency in food. Creation of a "Secretariat for Agricultural Expansion", which embarks on an intensive propaganda campaign among the federation cooperatives and their members, the aim being to prompt them to work in earnest to expand farming.

The VSK's travelling exhibition "Plant more or starve".

1942  Establishment of the Coop Sponsorship programme to support inhabitants of the country's mountain regions.

1948  The LVZ (Zurich foodstuffs association) opens the first self-service store at Stauffacherstrasse 20 in Zurich.

1950  The number of cooperatives peaks at 572.

1954  Formulation of propositions on the construction of regional warehouses. These reflect the requirement for consolidation, but without the need to change the structure of the federation and therefore revise the articles of association. Thirty warehouse and distribution centres are envisaged.

1956  Formation of a working group on standardized patronage refund stamps.

Official opening of the Coop training centre in Muttenz.

1960  The number of sales outlets peaks at 3,320.
